GEORGE CARDEN CIRCUS ELEPHANTS

The Asian Elephant is in danger of vanishing. Because of illegal ivory hunters and man destroying their natural habitats, these animals have been listed as an endangered species. The United States is attempting to protect these animals by passing the the Endangered Species Act of 1973 which includes rules and regulations for their handling and treatment. George Carden Circus International recognizes the importance and urgency of helping in this effort of protecting the elephants. All our Asian elephants are female so we do not participate in captive breeding. However, we attempt to educate the public about the need to protect the elephants through our exhibition of them. We tour almost all year with our elephants and they are always the center of attention. Our trainer, handlers and caretakers always answer questions the public asks about the elephants' eating habits, care and maintenance. The Circus is the only chance many people will ever have of seeing them up close and being aware of their uniqueness.
